OCC Announces New Senior Managers

WASHINGTON, D.C. -- The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC) today announced selection of 15 new senior managers for bank supervision policy and operations. Today's selections are part of an agency-wide reorganization, which was announced to employees in January 1997. The appointments are effective June 30, 1997.

"This reorganization reflects fundamental changes in the banking industry," said Comptroller of the Currency Eugene A. Ludwig. "It recognizes the continuing consolidation of the banking industry and takes into account the basic distinction in supervisory needs between large banks and mid-size/community banks. This new structure will allow the agency to be more flexible in adjusting to continuing changes in the banking industry."

The reorganization consolidates oversight of large bank supervision in the OCC's Washington Office and structures the OCC's district operations to focus on the particular needs of community and mid-size national banks. The agency's supervision policy department also has been restructured into three separate units focusing on core supervisory policy, policy for supervising credit risk, and community and consumer policy. The organizational structure has fewer managerial layers and gives the Washington Office greater responsibility for developing and maintaining examiner expertise.
